It will be hard to top last year's performance starring Lady Gaga and Francesco Vezzoli, but MOCA looks like it's aiming to outdo itself for its annual gala this November, the first since former dealer turned director Jeffrey Deitch took over this summer. Los Angeles artist Doug Aitken has come up with an immersive project called We that he describes as a "cultural ambush". Visitors to the event, which raised over $4m for the institution last year, will be involved in the performances set up on stages around the venue, including a musical set by avant-folk singer and songwriter Devendra Banhart. Considering Aitken's previous epic "happenings" and Banhart's trippy-hippy persona, prepare to get weird.
